

FOR RELEASE: April 15, 2026

Witness Chicago's Floral Renaissance

Chicago Flower Market offers florists and the public a sustainable, wholesale alternative to imported blooms from the grocery store.

Chicago, IL: Finding locally-grown blooms is no longer a challenge now that Chicago Flower Market opened in the Chicago Flower District. They supply Midwest-grown blooms to florists, DIY brides and event hosts at 3808 W North Ave Chicago, IL 60647.

Where are Flowers Grown?

80% of US blooms are imported according to a recent report by the US Chamber of Commerce. Plus, imported flowers are usually coated with pesticides well above the limit set for imported food as reported by The Guardian. With tariffs creating price uncertainty and florists becoming sick after years of chemical exposure, locally-grown flower collectives are opening throughout the US. Now, Chicagoans have the option to source local and safe flowers, too.

Turning the City's Floral Tables

Chicago Flower Market's blooms are Midwest-grown by 31 farms. Most growers do not use toxic chemicals and 28 are woman-owned.

"We allow Chicago to experience flowers – their true fragrance, heirloom varieties and natural colors," says Sarah Kott, Founder of Chicago Flower Market. "Our customers work with the most unique palette available in the city."

As the only wholesaler open to the public, all are invited to pre-order Mother's Day blooms, hanging baskets and seedlings at www.chiflowermarket.com beginning April 22nd. Flower sales continue all season through November.

About Chicago Flower Market: Founded in 2023, Chicago Flower Market offers Midwest-grown wholesale flowers for florists and the public May through October. Their Humboldt Park warehouse specializes in unique, sustainable blooms that can't be found at grocery stores. Customers can shop in store or pre-order up to two weeks in advance.

OPENING THIS SEASON: Petal Guild, a first-in-the-nation shared studio for florists, bookable at www.petalguild.com.
